HOW THE NOMINATION IS RE

We have heard from all parts of the land, and can now state definitely as to how the nomination is received. The news that comes to us from the South tand is what we might expect from that quarter. The ex-confederates and rebeis feel as though they had succeeded; and they have, so far as the Democratic party is concerned, for they have captured it. They now throw off the this disquires and the caution with which they had herelefore environed themselves, and speak right out boldly, and tell the country what they mean, and what they expect to do, when Seymour and Biair are elected.

There was a ratification meeting in Rich-

There was a ratification meeting in Richond on Saturday evening, and three thouand people were present. The crowd was different by several of the returning delecates.

Governor Vance, of North Carolina, whom everybody knows was one of the prime movers of the rebailion, made a savage and vimilative speech. His soul appears to be filled with late of the Government. He said that he could talk more familiarly of the South there in Richmond than in the North; and he gave it as his opinion, that "what the South fample for result for was by the election of Seymour and Blatz."

That intensely irrepressible individual Henry

That intensely irrepressible individual, Henry That intensely irrepressible individual, Heary A. Wise, was one of the speakers. He commenced by telling his audience that he did not eare for the platform. He said that the first resolution was a lie. "That resolution says that secession is dead; that was not so. Scenious was some after than eter. He supported the nominees, and especially Blair, because he had declared that he would assume military prower."

The tone and sentiment of this Richmond cetting clearly demonstrates that the unreocratic party at their back, and that with Democratic party at their back, and that with such backers as Seymour and Blair, the "backers and their part is they exult too soon.

Turning our attention to the North and Northwest we find the Pendleton mon very generally pleased. Their satisfaction, however, does not appear to rest upon any particular prospect that success awaits the New York nomination, but grows chiefly out of the fact that they have compelled the party to take their chief's platform, hence such journals as the Chicago Times. Columbus Nuterson, Cincinnal Supairer and other kindred sheets, are jubilant over both the platform and the candidates. This Enstern nomination leaves an open field for Georgia in 1872. There is quite a large class of men who do not feel satisfied with either the platform or the candidates. These are the friends of he candidates. These are the friends of Hendricks, Hancock, Andrew Johnson and Chase, and some of them are talking of another convention and a new party. On the whole the muddle in the Democratic party is about as the Republicans would have it, and if that jury will work with a will from now till November a glorious rictory awaits them.

The above proposition, which is a part of the Democratic platform, has a plausibility should be a part of the Democratic platform, has a plausibility should be presented by the present the present and plausible, but neverthees discounsel. To show that it is dishonest, and that if does not meet the question fairly, it is may necessary to make a few statements and to submit a few questions.

In the first place, when the Secretary of the Freezier's part of the Freezier's markets meeting the first place.

in the first place, when the Secretary of the creasury and his agents negotiated the fire-wenties, what did they promise, or what in-incements did they hold out to the pur-hasors! Was there any intimation, or did hose who took these bonds have any other dist than this, that they would be paid in win! Had the Secretary and his agents given he least intimation that these bonds would replace the secretary that they would be paid in e least lutimation that these boods would redeemed in anything other than gold, ould they have been taken! An implied un-ratanding under such circumstances between contracting parties is as sacred as law.

Art Notes.

Are Neses.

How agreeably linked together are the "pleasures of the imagination" (not Akenvides) with fice works of art. Even while the mercury is boiling above the ninetice in the thermometer, is it not pleasant to contemplate a pretty rural seene portraying the rapid nowing atream—the arbor-bound cottage, nearly hid from view with winding vines and weeping willows! And to take agood look at "Brown's Niagara by Moonlight" is a refreshing as a shower-bath for, while the perspiration nows copiously as we write about it, we can hardly believe but that it is the spray blown over us and into our face by an ill-mainered juff or gust of discontented Boreas! This may be an exaggeration, or stretch of the

This may be an exaggeration, or stretch of the for such a day as gesterday! If you wish to experience the difference of the opposites, size just the furnace-shop at the away yard

and then visit Barlow's gallery of paintings, Pennsy lyania avenue, and you are sure to resilize a just conception of the "flights of the imagination" as well as the corporeal.

Among the many sool and pleasant scenes to be witnessed at Barlow's is the very pictureaque scene of "Moonlight and Sunset," by Wilson. It is a river scene, and the sun has just good down below the horizon, leaving the sky covered over its trail, by a dood of golden schem; while in the ethereal distance overhead is the new moon—queen of night—vieing with the god of day in answer to Ajax's prays," that there be light! Ajax saks no more!" Hastening "homeward bound" is a flock of wild durks "on the wing;" others are awinging over the placid river, while the weary sportsman is mooring his boaf on the river bank. It is not only a pretty scene, but a romantic one.

The painting represents a scene in the rural land of art and song; a flock of goats are traveling down the mountain path; the young kide are gamboling on the hill

A more animated one than the above is A more animated one than the above is a large paioting of an "Italian Market Seens," by Nicholas Berghau. It is quite an old work of art, and it cannot be disputed but that it is by one of the "old masters," having been painted two hundred years ago. The surrounding seenery is mountainous; while in the quiet little nock in the distance is the inevitable take (not Como) and the stone bridge. In the scene is depicted every phase of Italian life—the peer and the peasant, the duke and the dug, the painter and the butcher, the priest and the musician, the friar and the dake and the dog, the painter and the buther, the priest and the musican, the friar and the num, he.

We now come to one of Merrie Enginad's greatest figure painters—J. F. Herring, pers. We need not say that his "Farm Yard Seene" is life-like or a fine painting, for that is quite perceptible at the first glance of the admiring eye. In the yard is a fat, plump, country girl feeding sheep—fine specimens of the "black face" stock. Ducks and chickens are prowling around, seeking an opportunity to "dire" into the grain the absence and chickens, it, and more especially the plate of "Carlo'a," who is play ing "snapping turtle" at the heads of the ducks and chickens, for which he is being severely reprimanted by the Irich girl or Scotch lassie, whichever she is.

In the way of "silent postry" in the gallery, we have two marble statuettes, "Minerva", and "Venus surprised," copies from the origi, nals in the Vatican.
